Style 1 - OpenAI Reflection:

If I were a developer on the OpenAI team, I would have disagreed with the company's decision. The reason behind my stance is that I don't believe the release of the technology behind the company's text generator would allow for malicious behavior beyond what currently exists, and could potentially aid in research. Essentially I agree with what the Stanford professor in the article said about OpenAI's decision.

Although I would have made the opposite decision, I don't think that it is really an easy one, and I can see how the OpenAI team came to the decision that they did. Not releasing to the public is certainly a safeguard against any liability, whether social or moral, stemming from the release of the text generator.
